Aims

Vision

1 Influence

Politicians and policy makers to encourage culture change across the justice system and the people who work within it via: Policy, Research and Communications

- Government justice policy reflects a trauma and gender responsive approach

2 Redesign

The way the justice system responds to women and their children in a way that can be replicated and scaled nationally via: Hope Street residential community for women and their children

- The number of women going to prison is reduced.
- Maternal separation and intergenerational trauma is prevented.
- Women and children live happier lives free from crime.
- Hope Street becomes a blueprint for change.

3 Educate

People within the justice system on the impact of trauma, and draw on our knowledge and expertise to help build capacity within organisations via: Becoming Trauma Informed programme; Training; Regional networks; Quality Mark.

- Residents in prisons or at Hope Street understand how trauma affects them and have the skills to respond.

- Frontline staff/managers across the community and justice sector understand and respond effectively to trauma
- Community organisations and secure settings have trauma informed leadership, policies and systems in place.

A justice system that recognises, understands and responds to trauma
